Old Gent, Himself, To Distribute 1000 Bags of Candy
At Court House.

Circleville's kiddies, grown-ups and in fact everyone who has ever heard of, or ever seen, or really believes in Santa Claus, will be present at the Court house Tuesday evening at 7 o'clock when Santa Claus in all his glory visits Circleville to hand out candy to all the kiddies who attend the big time being sponsored by the Chamber of Commerce, the Elks, the American Legion and the other service clubs of the city.

Yes sir, there will be old Santa, himself, all decked out in his red clothes, with his huge sacks of candy and toys. One thousand bags of candy are to be given away to the kiddies who will shake Santa's hand during the evening.

The candy is being prepared by the Elks lodge, and the American Legion, and with the big community Christmas tree all bright and shiny in its coat of snow with numerous decorations, everything is ready for the big Christmas celebration which brings joy into the hearts of all the younger folks as well as the older people.

The heavy snow which covered the city Monday morning, will give the Christmas eve celebration just a little bit more cozy, and if it had not snowed, it seems more like Christmas to have the ground covered with snow and ice, and with the temperature not so cold, but agreeable to everyone. It is expected that a huge crowd will be in attendance when the time for the start of the program rolls round.

The program will open with several chimes selection by Carl Peim.

Rev. W. F. Rutherford of the United Brethren church, will pronounce the invocation. Then will come Santa Claus and his big time, followed by distribution of gifts.

CIRCLEVILLE COVERED BY 5-INCH SNOW

Five Persons Killed Throughout State—All Caused By Heavy Snowfall.

Circleville awoke early Monday to find five inches of snow piled white over everything. Tree trunks were plastered and shrubbery looked fluffy under its weight of white. Traffic lights swayed drunkenly in the wind, blinking their signals out of bleary eyes, under snowy hats set at rakish angles.

The beauty of the center of town decorations at Main and Court-sts, and the Christmas trees that lined Main and Court-sts, was enhanced by the heavy snowfall which clung to every bow. Every light on every tree was completely covered by snow, and from indications it seems certain that the snow will remain until after Christmas.

Early Monday morning a tractor pulling a snow plow through the streets was reminiscent of the old horse-drawn snow plow that cleared the pavements in the days when the drifts were six feet deep. The tractor, however, wasted no time and made the snow fly as it went puffing noisily down the street.

Children with a holiday took every advantage afforded by the heavy snowfall and hills and streets were covered with flying sleds. Old Santa Claus will have to back his new fangled airplane back in its hangar and dust off his reindeer and sleigh to travel his rounds in Circleville.

Among the injured was Kenneth Mills, football coach at Sandusky High school. He was seriously injured and three of his companions were hurt in a collision in Sandusky.

Snow was held responsible in all of the accidents.

More than 200 members of Ohio lodges of the Improved Order of Red Men aided in the dedication of the new wigwam of the local chapter, Congo Tribe No. 51, Saturday night when more than 20 candidates were initiated into the order.

The attendance was not as large as was expected, the bad weather preventing many of the members from making the trip.

All three degrees of the Red Men lodge were exemplified by the Kill Eagle Tribe No. 179 of Nelsonville. There were representatives from all the tribes with a number of Great Chiefs and Great Past Chiefs in attendance.

N. S. Cook of Deer Foot Tribe No. 113, Columbus, represented the Great Sachem and gave an inspiring talk on Redmanship. Can't A Coasting Place be Made for the Kiddies

Gee, it's great to have snow when we have a vacation, but where can we coast? This question is paramount with the children who are now enjoying their Christmas vacation, and one can't blame them for wanting a place to coast. Seldom do they enjoy having such a fine snow, when there is no school, and what's the use of having a sled if we can't use it?

Out-door sport is deemed really worth while these days. Physically, it builds up the resistance to disease and makes healthier children. The kids folks can remember the great times they used to have hitching onto wagons, or having a good coasting place, or now the automobile has taken the place of the wagon and it's dangerous to hitch onto automobiles. Every place the kids might coast

The man kept in a shadow, however, keeping Mitchell from getting any description of him. When Mitchell regained consciousness he found his overcoat had been torn open, his money, about $25 had been stolen and his groceries also gone.

Mitchell thinks he was hit with a heavy board or club. The force of the weapon broke through his hat and made two deep marks on his head.

No arrests have been made and so far no clues as to the identity of Mitchell's assailant. The alley was so dark and shadows were so deep that it was impossible for the victim to get any description whatever of his assailant.

HOLIDAY GREETINGS TO RED AND BLACK

We thank you, the members of the Red and Black for Your Holiday greetings.

We appreciate the co-operation you have given us during the past year and the readers of The Herald enjoy the Red and Black as much as we enjoy publishing this part of The Herald each week.

Can't A Coasting Place be Made for the Kiddies

Gee, it's great to have snow when we have a vacation, but where can we coast? This question is paramount with the children who are now enjoying their Christmas vacation, and one can't blame them for wanting a place to coast. Seldom do they enjoy having such a fine snow, when there is no school, and what's the use of having a sled if we can't use it?

Outdoor sport is deemed really worth while these days. Physically, it builds up the resistance to disease and makes healthier children. The older folks can remember the great times they used to have hitching onto wagons, or having a good coasting place, but now the automobile has taken the place of the wagon and it's dangerous to hitch onto automobiles. Every place the kids might coast there is too much traffic. So all they can do is take a chance with some friendly automobile or coast on these streets where danger lurks.

Can't the Mayor, as so many other Ohio cities' officials have done, close off streets where coasting is good and under proper police protection let the kids enjoy a real Christmas vacation?

Traffic would not suffer seriously from such a move and autoists would be glad to go a little out of the way so that the kids might have this pleasure. The parents will offer a hearty "Thank You" when they know the children are coasting where there are no dangers of being run over.

With all this snow and a week's vacation can't the kids have a place to coast?

C. MITCHELL IS VICTIM OF CLUB WIELDER

Unidentified Man Gets $25 Groceries In Rear of W. Main-St.

Charles Mitchell, Pinckney-st. narrowly escaped concussion of the brain late Saturday when he was struck down in the alley in the rear of the Mecca restaurant in W. Main-st by an unknown assailant and robbed of $25. Mitchell was returning to his home alone after shopping with his wife when he was attacked.

In taking the short cut to his side gate of the Pickens residence where Mr. and Mrs. Mitchell reside, Mr. Mitchell says he saw the man in the alley ahead of him but thought nothing of it. The man kept in a shadow, however, keeping Mitchell from getting any description of him. The man went out of sight, then, and when Mitchell reached the spot his assailant was last seen he was struck on the left side of the head and rendered unconscious.

When Mitchell regained consciousness he found his overcoat had been torn open, his money, about $25 had been stolen and his groceries also gone.

Mitchell thinks he was hit with a heavy board or club. The force of the weapon broke through his hat and made two deep marks on his head.

No arrests have been made and so far no clues as to the identity of Mitchell's assailant. The alley was so dark and shadows were so deep that it was impossible for the victim to get any description whatever of his assailant.

STORM CAUSES PLANE WRECK

Philadelphia Man Killed As A. T. Ship Overrides Field, Hits Stump.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Dec. 23.—(INS)—Officials today blamed a blinding snow storm for the crash of a transcontinental Air Transport plane here which killed one man yesterday.

Carrying 11 passengers from St. Louis, the huge craft overshot the field in attempting a landing and struck a stump, tearing off a portion of the landing gear and one motor.

Metal tie rods from the left landing gear were thrust through the fuselage in the smashup, fatally injuring D. C. Law of Philadelphia, and injuring C. M. Kline, also of Philadelphia. Kline is believed to have suffered a fractured leg.

Instead of turning over, the monoplane swung almost completely around at the impact. Pilot Dean Burford of Columbus, O., was at the controls.

The remaining nine passengers were shaken up by the crash and sudden change of direction, but none injured seriously.

Burford declared he had felt his way through the storm all the way from St. Louis and had picked up an hour's lost time upon his arrival here.

Burford, in describing the crash, said an unexpected wind swerved the plane just as it was settling to the ground.

MUHLENBERG SCHOOL NEWS

December 24, on Christmas eve is the day or evening set for the largest Christmas program that has been here for a long time. Through a combination of the church and school this program is to be given. The program will be held at the school building.

Everything to be free. A Christmas tree and Santa will be there. Begins promptly at 8 o'clock.

Christmas vacation will begin Tuesday evening and last until the first Monday following New Years.

There seems to be somewhat of a doubt as to the benefits which a school gets from a radio. We get a great deal of satisfaction in our programs. We enjoy listening to the foremost and most authentic sources of information. We give a standing invitation to parents to visit and learn with us at some of our radio periods which are from 2 to 3 on most days.

Most of the seniors have become the proud owners of pictures. We can see the whole senior class in any one of their homes. Also we must admit they are a good lot and thank the Baker Art Gallery for the fine work.

ATHLETICS

The Darbyville All Stars have organized for the year and will begin their season in the near future.

The high school teams met Atlanta here Friday night. Two very good games were played.

The girls' game was close with the Muhlenberg girls leading most of the way. There were many times when the score was even. It was a fine game and we appreciate the sportsmanship of this group of girls and their coach.

The boys' game was hard to lose. The score was tied 18 and 18 at the end of the game but in a three minute overtime period the Atlanta forwards rolled in three baskets. Clifton, a very hard player, was lost to the Muhlenberg aggregation in the first 10 minutes of play. This left a rather inexperienced sub to play the remainder of the game. This sub was Fullen and he took it upon himself and showed that the basketball ability is still persistent in the Fullen family.

Ashville at Ashville is our next opponent. This game is to be played on Friday night, Dec. 20. There will be three games.

PERRY-TWP.

PERRY-TWP SCHOOL NOTES

The Atlanta teams broke even last Friday eve when they met the Darbyville aggregations. The Atlanta girls were defeated by a score of 14-10. They couldn't locate the basket although their swift passing got the ball to their basket repeatedly.

The boys' game was fast and furious. There wasn't over four points difference in the scores throughout the game. During the first half the game was rather slow but exciting. Neither teams could find the basket. The score at the half stood, 11-7, Atlanta.

In the second half both teams came back determined to win that game. In this half there was only one point difference in the scores. The teams alternately took the lead until in the last fifteen seconds of play Hughes dropped in two foul shots for Atlanta making the score 16-16. The tip off went to Brigner who made a goal for Darbyville. Hughes came back with another field goal and Brigner followed suit again. At the end of the game, the score stood 18-18. They played three minutes overtime in which Atlanta found the basket. Hughes scored two points from under the basket and Farmer followed with three successful shots from center. The game ended with Atlanta leading by a score of 26-18.

The Atlanta teams will play the Pickaway teams at Atlanta next Friday evening, Dec. 20.

The first, fifth and sixth grades will give a Christmas program in the H. S. auditorium next Friday afternoon, Dec. 20. At 1:30. Everyone is invited.

MAN WELL AGAIN, PAYS TRIBUTE TO NEW KONJOLA

Indigestion and Nervousness Quickly Ended When Modern Medicine Is Put To Test.

MR. SMITH BLACKMAN.

"Konjola is the medicine I should have had a year ago," said Mr. Smith Blackman, Erie, Michigan, near Toledo. "Ever since I underwent an operation I had been unable to regain my strength. I suffered from indigestion, nervousness and constipation. After every meal I had pains in my stomach for hours. I tried many medicines and tonics but each in turn failed to do any good."

My wife had taken Konjola with excellent results so finally I decided to try it. I found to my delight that Konjola was exactly what I needed. Within a week I was better in every way and at the end of four weeks I was stronger than before my operation. My bowels function normally. My appetite has increased and indigestion is gone. Konjola holds a place of honor in my home."

Konjola is sold in Circleville at Hamilton & Ryan's store, and at all the best drug stores throughout this entire section.—Adv.

TIGERS PRACTICE ON CLUB COURT

The Circleville Tigers basketball squad will practice in the C. A. C. gym this week due to the fact that there is no fire kept in the local high school building during the Christmas vacation.

The Tigers practice this week will probably be a hard one as on Friday the local quintet game will be played against their ancient rivals, Chillicothe.

STORM CAUSES PLANE WRECK

Philadelphia Man Killed As A. T. Ship Overrides Field, Hits Stump.

INDIANAPOLIS, IND., Dec. 23.—(INS)—Officials today blamed a blinding snow storm for the crash of a transcontinental Air Transport plane here which killed one man yesterday.

Carrying 11 passengers from St. Louis, the huge craft overshot the field in attempting a landing and struck a stump, tearing off a portion of the landing gear and one motor.

Metal tie rods from the left landing gear were thrust through the fuselage in the smashup, fatally injuring D. C. Law of Philadelphia, and injuring C. M. Kline, also of Philadelphia. Kline is believed to have suffered a fractured leg.

Instead of turning over, the monoplane swung almost completely around at the impact. Pilot Dean Burford of Columbus, O., was at the controls.

The remaining nine passengers were shaken up by the crash and sudden change of direction, but none injured seriously.

Burford declared he had felt his way through the storm all the way from St. Louis and had picked up an hour's lost time upon his arrival here.

Burford, in describing the crash, said an unexpected wind swerved the plane just as it was settling to the ground.

BIRTHS

Mr. and Mrs. C. Leslie Rihl of Pleasant-st announce the birth of a son Monday, Dec. 23.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Wylie Fetherlin will go to Greenfield Monday where they will spend the Christmas vacation.

MUHLBERG SCHOOL NEWS

December 24, on Christmas eve is the day or evening set for the largest Christmas program that has been here for a long time. Through a combination of the church and school this program is to be given. The program will be held at the school building.

Everything to be free. A Christmas tree and Santa will be there, too. Begins promptly at 8 o'clock. Christmas vacation will begin Tuesday evening and last until the first Monday following New Years.

There seems to be somewhat of a doubt as to the benefits which a school gets from a radio. We get a great deal of satisfaction in our programs. We enjoy listening to the foremost and most authentic sources of information. We give a standing invitation to parents to visit and learn with us at some of our radio periods which are from 2 to 3 on most days.

Most of the seniors have become the proud owners of pictures. We can see the whole senior class in any one of their homes. Also we must admit they are a good lot and thank the Baker Art Gallery for the fine work.

ATHLETICS

The Darbyville All Stars have organized for the year and will begin their season in the near future.

The high school teams met Atlanta here Friday night. Two very good games were played.

The girls' game was close with the Muhlenberg girls leading most of the way. There were many times when the score was even. It was a fine game and we appreciate the sportsmanship of this group of girls and their coach.

The boys' game was hard to lose. The score was tied 18 and 18 at the end of the game but in a three minute overtime period the Atlanta forwards rolled in three baskets. Clifton, a very hard player, was lost to the Muhlenberg aggregation in the first 10 minutes of play. This left a rather inexperienced sub to play the remainder of the game. This sub was Fuller and he took it upon himself and showed that the basketball ability is still persistent in the Fuller family.

Ashville at Ashville is our next opponent. This game is to be played on Friday night, Dec. 20. There will be three games.

WILLIAMSPORT HI

Mr. and Mrs. Ted Davis and family of Columbus, spent Sunday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. C. R. Leist and family.

The Farmers' Institute will be held at Washington-twp school Jan. 10 and 11, 1930. Everybody is welcome. The high school and grades will make advertising posters for which prizes will be awarded.

Washington basketball girls were defeated Friday evening, December 13, by Pickaway girls. The score was 32-6.

Washington's basketball boys' second team and Pickaway boys' Freshmen team played a game on

PERRY-TWP.

PERRY-TWP SCHOOL NOTES

The Atlanta teams broke even last Friday eve when they met the Darbyville aggregations. The Atlanta girls were defeated by a score of 14-10. They couldn't locate the basket although their swift passing got the ball to their basket repeatedly.

The boys' game was fast and furious. There wasn't over four points difference in the scores throughout the game. During the first half the game was rather slow but exciting. Neither teams could find the basket. The score at the half stood, 11-7, Atlanta.

In the second half both teams came back determined to win that game. In this half there was only one point difference in the scores. The teams alternately took the lead until in the last fifteen seconds of play Hughes dropped in two foul shots for Atlanta making the score 16-16. The tip off went to Brigner who made a goal for Darbyville. Hughes came back with another field goal and Brigner followed suit again. At the end of the game, the score stood 18-18. They played three minutes overtime in which Atlanta found the basket. Hughes scored two points from under the basket and Farmer followed with three successful shots from center. The game ended with Atlanta leading by a score of 26-18.

The Atlanta teams will play the Pickaway teams at Atlanta next Friday evening, Dec. 20.

The first, fifth and sixth grades will give a Christmas program in the H. S. auditorium next Friday afternoon, Dec. 20, at 1:30. Everyone is invited.

School will be dismissed Friday evening until Jan. 6, 1930.

MAN WELL AGAIN, PAYS TRIBUTE TO NEW KONJOLA

Indigestion and Nervousness Quickly Ended When Modern Medicine Is Put To Test.

MR. SMITH BLACKMAN.

"Konjola is the medicine I should have had a year ago," said Mr. Smith Blackman, Erie, Michigan, near Toledo. "Ever since I underwent an operation I had been unable to regain my strength. I suffered from indigestion, nervousness and constipation. After every meal I had pains in my stomach for hours. I tried many medicines and tonics but each in turn failed to do any good."

"My wife had taken Konjola with excellent results so finally I decided to try it. I found, to my delight, that Konjola was exactly what I needed. Within a week I noticed results. Day by day I grew better in every way, and at the end of four weeks I was stronger than before my operation. My bowels function normally; my appetite has increased, and indigestion is fine. Konjola surely holds a place of honor in our home."

Konjola is sold in Circleville at Hamilton & Ryan drug store, and by all the best druggists throughout this entire section.—Adv.

ANOTHER MARINE ELECTION
Light, however faint, appears in darkest Haiti. Petitions from several political organizations in the island, said to represent perhaps 200,000 followers, ask for a national election under American supervision.

It looks like another job for the American marines. The election they held in Nicaragua a year ago resulted in improvement there even though the candidate who had been upheld by the United States failed to win. Nicaragua has been functioning since then more like a self-governing state. The same result might possibly be attained by the same process in Haiti. At any rate, since more paternalistic methods have failed—or as our Latin-American critics would say, more imperialistic methods—this seems worth trying.

Uncle Sam doesn't want the job of governing backward neighbors. He wants them to grow up politically. They can learn self-government only through experience. They will not develop politically while an outside power makes their laws, administers their affairs and does their policing for them. Regular and honest elections are the first requisite.

In some cases, in Central America and the Caribbean a little supervision may be necessary for a while yet. But the less they can get along with, the more they will develop their own powers and the better Americans will like it.

It might be a good thing if some way could be devised whereby the other important powers of the Latin-American Union would help with this work of supervision. That would lighten our task and silence their criticism.

PRISONS OVERFLOWING

Anyone who thinks criminals are not being punished in this country ignores the statistics. Our total prison population, the National Society for Penal Information shows, has increased one-half in the last 10 years, and is growing now faster than ever.

Take two typical federal prisons those at Atlanta and Leavenworth. The former had 1,236 inmates in 1918. It has 3,323 now. The latter had 1,629 in 1919 and has 3,684 now. The capacity in both of these prisons, by the way, is supposed to be about one-half of the present population.

The situation is said to be worse in the state prisons and reformatories than in the federal institutions, with prisoners pouring in far beyond the ability of the institutions to provide them with decent accommodations and work to keep them busy.

Two facts particularly impress anyone who studies the situation. First, this great increase of penal population seems to come largely from offenses against the prohibition and narcotic laws, which provide 47 per cent of all the federal prisoners. Second, the resulting over-crowdedness is largely the cause of the bloody outbursts in American prisons this year.

"Punchon" and "Slab"

A punchon is a split log or heavy slab with the far smoothed. A slab is the outside piece, with or without the bark, taken from a log. In the days when floors were made of punchons, in some localities only inside pieces were designated with this name.

ANOTHER SEASONABLE PROBLEM

"STORM-TOSSED"

BY HELEN SCHERMERHORN YOUNG

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE

Enid Monroe, young daughter of a cultivated New York family, has been loved since school days by Ned Grier and Dick Grant. The two boys have been chums, and the friendship grows with the years. Enid favors Dick.

(NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.)

CHAPTER II.

"THERE they come!" Dave shouted, proud of his team and his friends on it.

Enid, her face flushed, sat very still while the crowd roared. During each tense play she tried to watch the boys and single them out of the mass of arms and legs when the referee blew his whistle.

Then—some one was hurt. Could it be? Every one waited. They took his helmet off. There was Ned's light hair plastered against his head. They helped him off the field. Enid shivered and hoped he wasn't hurt badly. Poor Ned—what a terrible game this was!

The band played between the halves and every one stood up and stamped feet. It was getting cold.

Then came the team. They were playing again.

Only a little while to play now. Oh, there was a man lying on the ground—the team had advanced the ball and there he was lying—like a wounded soldier unable to carry on.

She saw the coach and doctor rush out on the field and bend over him. The team came back and huddled around; then they carried him off. A cheer like thunder arose: "Grant—Grant—"

Dick—oh, Dick! Her heart stood still. She could scarcely keep from crying—Dick unconscious! The pain must have been terrible to have made him faint like that. Where was he hurt? What was it? If she could only run down out of that grandstand to him! Were they caring for him—and had the pain stopped?

Enid did not see the rest of the game. She was startled when it was over and the boys' team had won.

Coming back in the train she was strangely quiet. Two newspaper men sat behind her.

"Say," one of the men exclaimed, "that Dick Grant is some fellow. Do you know that he played for ten minutes with a broken wrist and never let on? For fear they would take him out? Imagine it! He'd have finished the game if the pain hadn't knocked him out, I guess. I call that nerve."

"Grier got hurt, too," said the other.

"Grier won't take it, I understand. He hasn't got guts. You noticed he quit in the first half. Grant's the boy."

Enid thought they would never get home, and she was sorry they were going to the theatre that evening. Dick—suffering and nothing but rough trainers and rubbers to care for him—dear Dick.

So the girl dreamed back when her thoughts leaped into the dazling future. She was seventeen—and was going to the Senior Ball. It had seemed strange to Enid that Dick made no more effort to see her alone. Of course, the boys called on her together when they came to New York for their vacations, but Dick always came with Ned, and at parties she would dance first with one and then with the other. Was there an agreement between them, or was there simply a deep loyalty which prevented one or the other from assuming the role of the devoted?

Down in her heart she knew that both young men liked her, and often in their letters she could feel that they wrote with restraint. And what a strange thing—every other boy whom she knew had tried to kiss her and make love to her!

She knew she was attractive to men. In fact, the telephone rang all day. "Could she go here and could she go there?"

"You'll wind up by marrying Dick or Ned," David, her brother, once said. "Wonder which it will be!"

"Ridiculous," Enid laughed back. "They've never been mushy over me in their whole lives."

"That's all right—they're not the mushy kind. I haven't known those two fellows since I was a pup not to know their style."

Enid swung her little foot back and forth a shade faster, opened her pretty red mouth, wherein she placed another large chocolate, and speculated quietly to herself.

Dick—or Ned? How strange it would be if she had to make up her mind! Of course, Ned was handsome—he had such beautiful, wavy light hair—and looks counted in those days to Enid. And he was of her own people, too—eastern New York. Kind of homey—and so funny, too. He could always make her laugh.

But what was it about Dick, great big, dear old Dick, with that shock of black hair which wouldn't stay in place and which he was always pushing back out of his eyes? Something in the side of her head as she thought of the first night she had met him. What a kid she had been and how frightened for fear she would be a wallflower and have to pretend to enjoy sitting with her mother and the other chaperons on the sidelines.

Ned had invited her. She was to be his guest. Rather peculiar Dick hadn't said anything. Though she did not know it, it was chance and chance only that had prevented Dick from inviting Enid to the Senior Ball. He had dreamed of inviting her, and had anticipated the pride he should feel when he would take her up to the receiving line and introduce her. How beautiful she would look as she marched in the grand march with him!

Enid—had never invited a girl to a prom since he had been in college. He would give her the distinction of being the only girl he ever invited to a dance.

One early Spring day, when he and Ned were lying out under a tree near the fraternity house waiting for the afternoon classes to begin, Ned said:

"Going to take anybody to the ball?"

"I thought I would invite Enid," Dick said.

"I thought I would myself," said Ned. "He hesitated a moment. 'In fact, I mentioned it to her at Easter, I think.'"

"Did you out and out invite her?" asked Dick.

"I don't remember. You know how you say those things."

Dick was dumfounded. What a disappointment! He'd just had his car repaired, too, so it would be smart when she arrived. But why did Ned add that "I think?"

They smoked for a little while in silence, then Ned said:

"Well, what are we going to do about it? We can't both ask her."

What would they do? At least, they should each have an even chance—since Ned had put it that way, Dick thought.

"I'll tell you what we can do," Dick replied. He reached in his pocket and brought out a coin. "We'll toss up," he said.

"Good," agreed Ned. "Heads or tails?"

"Heads," Ned chose.

Dick looked at the coin—it was a half-dollar. He snapped it between his thumb and first finger, it shot into the air and glistened in the sunlight as it twirled down to his open palm.

He looked at it. There was the woman's head with Liberty on her crown and the date below it—1929.

"Heads," Dick said, smothering the fierce disappointment which he felt as he gazed at the classic head on the coin.

And Ned, trying to disguise his delight, said:

"I can't say I'm exactly sorry, Dick. I was with me that time. But, of course, it had to be tough on one of us."

PEARL

Pearl was a towny. Her father worked in the railroad yards. There was a big family of children, and as soon as Pearl was old enough to get her working papers, she got out of it. There was not much fun in pushing your little brothers and sisters, and there always seemed to be a new one to push up and down the streets in a baby carriage, wishing in vain for—and not getting—a pair of spike-heeled slippers when you were dying for them and had pretty legs.

Business school? Not on your life. Trained nurse? Takes too long. Shop-girl? Talk to women all day—bore!

One day she saw an ad for a girl needed in the check-room at the hotel. Just the thing. Why waste time on a lot of college boys when you might meet some distinguished commercial traveling men?

And for eight years Pearl had kept to her post and to her resolution as to not wasting her time on college boys. But one rainy Spring evening when big Ned Grier, the left tackle on the team, had left his coat before going into the grill for dinner, she thought she'd look that young man over when he came out. Grier—some good-looking blond kid, all right, a regular sheik, and they said his old man had a ton of money, too. Their names were always in the New York papers. Might not be bad. He had a car, too, a snappy roadster. Would be pretty soft to drive up the road these warm nights.

She waited, smiling as each man came out, receiving her tip with an extra smile as she slipped it in the pocket of her little lace apron.

Pearl was a pretty little thing. Ned admitted afterwards that she was a blonde because she lived near a drugstore, but, nevertheless, those golden curls were pretty. Against her neck curled some little ringlets—he saw them when she reached for his coat.

It was that night, when she reached up as she held his overcoat for him, that she let her hand rest on his shoulders for a moment. In that moment—accidentally, oh, yes, entirely unconsciously, for she was only helping him on with his raincoat—she stood so close to him that he could feel the outline of her figure against his back.

Ned went to the grill the next night for dinner.

"Good evening, Mr. Grier," Pearl said as she took his hat and coat. Ned was flattered that she knew his name.

It didn't take him long to eat his dinner. He ordered something that was ready, and as he came out of the grill to the coat-room he wondered if he would feel her lean against him. It really wasn't cool enough for an overcoat, but he'd worn his just to have her hold it for him.

Tonight she did more than lean against him; she pressed against him, and when Ned turned around to take his hat his face was flushed.

"What's your name?" he asked, looking down at her.

Just then another man came out and handed his check to her.

"Excuse me a moment, Mr. Grier," she said. The nod of her blond curls also said, "Don't go."

After she had given the man his coat and hat she returned to Ned.

"What did you say your name is?" he asked again.

"Pearl—Pearl Jackson."

"What time do you get through here?"

"The grill closes at ten," she replied, lowering her eyes.

"Want to go out to Kelly's with me?"

"Oh, thank you, Mr. Grier. But I have a date tonight."

She was meeting a gentleman in "the gent's" furnishing line," and she'd told him where he could get some gin. She came right back at Ned, however. "How about Sunday?" Then the other gentleman, with his sample cases, would be gone.

"Fine," said Ned. "I'll be out front at ten in the car. He looked down at her. Sunday was a long way off. Then he said:

"Don't call me Mr. Grier. Call me Ned."

THEATRES

AT THE CLIFTONA

One of George M. Cohan's greatest musical comedy hits forms the plot basis for "Little Johnny Jones" a very elaborate and punchy "special" talking picture at the Cliftona theatre.

Old-timers will think of Cohan dancing, singing his characteristic songs in his memorable way, and waving the American flag, when they hear two of the songs Eddie Buzzell, famous Broadway comedian, sings in the new picture.

For "I'm a Yankee Doodle Dandy" and "Give My Regards to Broadway" have been retained from the famous musical show and Buzzell, who takes the title role of the jockey, also sings several new ones.

The two old song hits promise to be popular all over again, and several of the new numbers, written especially for the picture, are surefire.

Director Mervyn LeRoy, who played the jockey in "Little Johnny Jones," on the stage in San Francisco years ago at the Alcazar and directed the big film for First National and Vitaphone is enthusiastic over the Cohan material for screen plots.

AT THE GRAND

K. McKenna and Marguerite Churchill ably assist Miss Burgess in the picture.

ANOTHER MARINE ELECTION
Light, however faint, appears in darkest Haiti. Petitions from several political organizations in the island, said to represent perhaps 200,000 followers, ask for a national election under American supervision.

It looks like another job for the American marines. The election they held in Nicaragua a year ago resulted in improvement there even though the candidate who had been upheld by the United States failed to win. Nicaragua has been functioning since then more like a self-governing state. The same result might possibly be attained by the same process in Haiti. At any rate, since more paternalistic methods have failed—or as our Latin-American critics would say, more impulsive methods—this seems worth trying. Uncle Sam doesn't want the job of governing backward neighbors. He wants them to grow up politically. They can learn self-government only through experience. They will not develop politically while an outside power makes their laws, administers their affairs and does their policing for them. Regular and honest elections are the first requisite.

In some cases, in Central America and the Caribbean a little supervision may be necessary for a while yet. But the less they can get along with the more they will develop their own powers and the better Americans will like it.

It might be a good thing if some way could be devised whereby the other important powers of the Latin-American Union would help with this work of supervision. That would lighten our task and silence their criticism.

PRISONS OVERFLOWING
Anyone who thinks criminals are not being punished in this country ignores the statistics. Our total prison population, the National Society for Penal Information shows, has increased one-half in the last 10 years, and is growing now faster than ever.

Take two typical federal prisons those at Atlanta and Leavenworth. The former had 1,236 inmates in 1918. It has 3,323 now. The latter had 1,629 in 1919 and has 3,684 now. The capacity in both of these prisons, by the way, is supposed to be about one-half of the present population.

The situation is said to be worse in the state prisons and reformatories than in the federal institutions, with prisoners pouring in far beyond the ability of the institutions to provide them with decent accommodations and work to keep them busy.

Two facts particularly impress anyone who studies the situation. First, this great increase of penal population seems to come largely from offenders against the prohibition and narcotic laws, which provide 47 per cent of all the federal prisoners. Second, the reason over-crowdedness is largely the cause of the bloody outbursts in American prisons this year.

"Punchoon" and "Slab"

A punchoon is a spit log or heavy slab with the face smoothed. A slab is the outside piece, with or without the bark, taken from a log. In the days when fires were made of puncheon, in such localities only inside pieces were designated with this name.

ANOTHER SEASONABLE PROBLEM

"STORM-TOSSED"
BY HELEN SCHERMERHORN YOUNG

WHAT HAS GONE BEFORE

Enid Monroe, young daughter of a cultivated New York family, has been loved since school days by Ned Grier and Dick Grant. The two boys have been chums, and the friendship grows with the years. Enid favors Dick.

(NOW GO ON WITH THE STORY.)

CHAPTER II.

"THERE they come!" David shouted, proud of his team and his friends on it. Enid, her face flushed, sat very still while the crowd roared. During each tense play she tried to watch the boys and single them out of the mass of arms and legs when the referee blew his whistle. Then—some one was hurt. Could it be? Every one waited. They took his helmet off. There was Ned's light hair plastered against his head. They helped him off the field. Enid shivered and hoped he wasn't hurt badly. Poor Ned—what a terrible game this was!

The band played between the halves and every one stood up and stamped feet. It was getting cold.

Then came the team. They were playing again.

Only a little while to play now. Oh, there was a man lying on the ground—the team had advanced the ball and there he was lying—like a wounded soldier unable to carry on.

She saw the coach and doctor rush out on the field and bend over him. The team came back and nudged around; then they carried him off. A cheer like thunder arose: "Grant—Grant—Grant!"

Dick—oh, Dick! Her heart stood still. She could scarcely keep from crying—Dick unconscious. The pain must have been terrible to have made him faint like that. Where was he hurt? What was it? If she could only run down out of that grandstand to him! What was she caring for him—and had the pain stopped?

Enid did not see the rest of the game. She was startled when it was over and the boys' team had won.

Coming back in the train she was strangely quiet. Two newspaper men sat behind her.

"Say," one of the men exclaimed, "that Dick Grant is some fellow. Do you know that he's played for ten minutes with a broken wrist and never let on?"

"I don't know," she said, "but I imagine it. He'd have finished the game if the pain hadn't knocked him out. I guess I call that nerve."

"Grier got hurt, too," said the other.

"Grier won't take it. I understand. He hasn't got guts. You know he quit in the first half. Grant's the one."

Enid thought they would never get home, and she was sorry they were going to the doctor. That evening, Dick was suffering and nothing but rough treatment and rubbers to care for him—dead Dick.

So the girl dreamed and her thoughts leaped into the distant future. She was a doctor and was going to the Senior Ball. It had seemed strange to Enid that Dick had made no effort to see her alone. Of course, the boys' crowd of her friends when they came to her to look for her, and she had a day's care and a night's rest, and she was a doctor and was going to the Senior Ball. THEATRES

Old-timers will think of Cohan dancing, singing his characteristic songs in his memorable way, and waving the American flag, when they hear two of the songs Eddie Buzzell, famous Broadway comedian, sings in the new picture.

For "I'm a Yankee Doodle Dandy" and "Give My Regards to Broadway" have been retained from the famous musical show and Buzzell, who takes the title role of the jockey, also sings several new ones.

The two old song hits promise to be popular all over again, and several of the new numbers, written especially for the picture, are surefire.

Director Mervyn LeRoy, who played the jockey in "Little Johnny Jones," on the stage in San Francisco years ago at the Alcazar and directed the big film for First National and Vitaphone is enthusiastic over the Cohan material for screen plots.

K. McKenna and Marguerite Churchill ably assist Miss Burgess in the picture.
